The Black Cat remake is headed to the big screen, with Channing Tatum in the leading role. On the latest episode of US Weekly's Hollywood Dish podcast,

Tatum revealed that he was already busy with his movie “21 Jump Street,” in which he plays a cop who helps his old nemesis, Jenko, go after the bad guys. But he also reportedly had a meeting with directors to direct the Channing Tatum and Jamie Lee Curtis remake of the classic film “The Black Cat.” According to the Hollywood Reporter, Tatum did not direct, but agreed to star in the remake. It is expected to debut in 2020. Tatum told US Weekly: “I already had a meeting with the director [Rich Lee]. Channing Tatum and Jamie Lee Curtis are going to be in the remake of ‘The Black Cat.’ I’m going to be on the side of the cat. But yeah, it’s going to be great. It’s in the works.” The character of Tatum’s in the remake is described as a counter-terrorism agent who has been driven to emotional and mental exhaustion after losing a partner in the line of duty. When the real-life Tatum’s character learns that he is being “framed” for a mass-murder, he instead tells his wife to flee for her safety. The horror ensues as he drives off to deal with the situation alone. The film, which is about a criminal mastermind who targets successful people,
