What should you do if you find a BOGO sale? Do you ignore it? Do you turn it down? Should you try to match it? Below you will find the answers to these frequently asked questions. For many of us, having one or more of these common gifts on our lists will qualify us for a BOGO deal. What does this BOGO sale mean? It means you can buy this product at a very low price. Depending on the deal, you may pay nothing or be able to pay even less! Let's assume you have already been in the market for a major purchase and are continuing to search for a deal. You may find a store to purchase at a low price and try to take advantage of this one time good fortune. What you should do? First, a good idea is to know the terms of the offer and take them to heart. The obvious questions are, how long will it last? Can you wait for a week or a month to get the deal? Do you need it right away or can you wait? A better idea would be to carefully read the fine print. It may tell you that the sale is for a limited time and not applicable to your purchase. Certain stores may not be able to honor a BOGO offer if they do not have the same, or similar items. If you are accustomed to getting these deals, however, you can set yourself apart from the rest of the shoppers and approach these special offers with a strategy that will allow you to benefit as much as possible. You may be the only person or person with certain criteria who can shop. Do a little homework. Look at the products offered by the store and decide if you can afford to buy them at full price. Also, notice the reasons a customer buys an item. You will learn this information by reading carefully the advertisements and reviews you find on the site where the sale is going on. This is important to know before you start shopping. You may be able to wait for a special promotion, or sell the item on the secondary market. If you do wait and the item is sold again, you may be able to get the item for a much lower price. You may know exactly what you want and would be willing to pay for it. In this case, you can
