The sites allow users to communicate directly with Autodesk employees, other developers, or Autodesk's technical support personnel. In the past, Autodesk offered one of the first online communities for CAD users, Autodesk Connect. Through the Autodesk Connect website, CAD users were able to "ask for help" and "ask for ideas". They could also gain access to features that were not released to the general public yet, find software updates, view CAD Tips & Tricks, attend online forums, request technical support, or submit CAD ideas and requests. Autodesk Connect was replaced in 2008 with Autodesk User Groups, which is a now discontinued program which offered a number of community resources including forums, a code library, and advanced discussion forums.
